Mozart, Chevalier de Saint-Georges, Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert Born May 4 1655 in Padua, Venice, Italy, Bartolomeo Cristofori invented the pianoforte around 1700-1720. There are over 6000 working parts in the body of each piano today. Over 200 strings are required for its full range of sound. It is a percussion instrument. Whatever instrument you play, you most likely also play the piano. It is the computer of music. All rehearsals of any musical sections most likely use the piano if accompaniment

My piano lessons began at age 5. My first teacher taught me to "improvise classical." He also taught me that my ear was the best teacher. I have had very little formal training for performance. Still I have played in front of tens of thousands in San Francisco Carnival and "Reggae On The River" among other large performances. I began studying classical music correctly 2004, so like the greatest dancer Nureyev, I am a latecomer to my craft.

Most people in classical music branch out into other styles but I "branch in." From years of accumulated knowledge of many types of music construction and form, I delve deep into the roots of classical music for its beauty.

Grandmother Claudia Ruddock-Vincent the pianist knew of her grandfather, professor Theodore Dehon Ruddock, how he would "not suffer a wrong note." As they say. The great orchestra leader and performer James Brown would even call from stage: "I got you!" to band members and fine them for wrong notes.

Every effort is made to play exactly what the composer intended. Tempos are as close to exactly what is on the sheet music paper without the wild fluctuations. The idea is, if you are blind, you can learn the song this way. If you wish to play along to learn the song or borrow phrases from the songs this is enabled with extreme clarity and the express purpose to share the charms that the composer has buried in the songs, as in a treasure hunt.
